Below is a copy of the college essay written by Luke Parlatore. The essay topic: "What was the most important lesson that I have ever learned." Here, Luke writes about his experiences on our track team. Nothing more closely explains what the St. Joseph Sea cross country/track & field experience is like.

"The Most Valuable Lesson I Have Learned"

When I was younger, the only concept of a team that I had was, what I reasoned it to be from the professionals on television. When I started running for my school's track team, the only thing I made of my participation was that it was a way to stay healthy and make some new friends. Now as a senior and varsity runner, I realize how naïve I was. I did not fully comprehend what being on a team meant. I can look back on the past years and realize that my high school experience and development as a young man, would be drastically different without the influence of this athletic camaraderie. Track has taught me many valuable ideals that have molded my character.

When I walked through the doors of Saint Joseph by-the-Sea High School, as a grammar school graduate, I felt like I was a domestic animal, with the habits accustomed to an inclusive grammar school environment, being thrown into the wilds of the un-assuring atmosphere that was freshman year in high school. Then, as I began my studies, an uncertain novice in the high school system, I made the most instrumental decision of the past four years, this was to run for my school's cross country and track team.

My belief in sportsmanship has created a person who treats people equal in every way. My drive to constantly perfect my athletic skills during track has ignited within me everlasting ambition. My status as a varsity runner has made me become a mentor to other team members, unveiling the leadership qualities within. My knowledge of the true meaning of a team, has motivated me into commitment and dedication, preparing me to pursue my future goals. Being on the track team, has developed my personality into that of a charismatic, disciplined, and aspiring human being. Most importantly, recently I'm learning to incorporate these virtues into my academics and community involvement. For me, it has always been advantageous to be a student athlete, a quality that I have track to thank for.

The greatest gift that track has given me, is the fellowship of fraternity that is so profoundly apparent among my teammates. The faces of my fellow team members are the same faces that I have seen everyday after school at practice, and they are the faces of the people I have grown and matured with through high school. Together we compete, together we win, and together we lose. Everyone pushes each other to perform to the best of our abilities and we help each other to utilize the talents that put us on the team. The unity of my track team is what supports us in our endeavor to win. Also, the relationship we have is not just team member to team member, we have been through the joys of victory and the sorrows of defeat together and could never be nothing less than friends. In my situation, I am not the participant of a team but a member of a brotherhood, and am appreciative to have such an honor.

All of there character-building aspects of track are the bricks that have built, what I believe, is the most valuable lesson of my immediate life. This is the understanding that I must always keep myself vital and refined mentally, physically, spiritually and socially. I have come to this realization because of track and I maintain it through track. I know now, that in order to become a well rounded individual, I must constantly improve myself in these areas.

Walking through those doors when I began high school, I did not know what laid in store for me or what my four years would be like. Now that those four years are near an end, I am grateful that I made that pivotal decision to join the cross country and track team. To some track is viewed as just another extracurricular, but to me it is the medium that has molded and reshaped my distinctive qualities as a person.
